Executive Director, NPIC THRII: Chief, Production Services Group 1. I still have reservations regarding the ability of the Director of OCS to control ADP throughout the Agency. It seems to me that if he is charged with this responsibility, he is in the position of "responsibility without authority" since the other ADP components are embedded in the line organizations which they serve. Regarding planning and coordination, I agree with your statement. 2. I am still concerned about "project review". I am convinced that line management has to accept responsibility for the ADP projects which are designed to meet its requirements, rather than to pass that responsibility to an outside review board. Executive Din: Comments on Osfin Dager.

Orbin:

as I noted in my comments to if the aguage establisher an ADP advisor I feel he should ofwate out of a higher level than the Director of Computer Services. I wiew this person as the feolice establisher & director pointer for the agency. To do this I feel he should be higher than an office director & not a line director.

_) o hu: Just som I also agree with her #2. Project review comes with managment. It is my opinion it should stay the & not be handed to someone auticle the center. I feel we are in a better position to say what comes fout. 5./0
